Description

Over the last few years co-management has become a popular concept though proven only to be used as a useful method of cooperation in very few examples. Still, based on more than one example, Council of Europe states tried and/or have been planning to base youth participation in decision making founded on this concept. Exact ways of putting co-management into practice remains unclear. However, practical question on how to develop concept implementation and structure that would serve equality, respect and democracy while involving young people in decision- making, have been arising.
